

Man bites parrot

There was found a parrot (5) in the West Street. The previous sentence might be understood that the parrot had got lost and we apply to you with finding his true owner; but that is wrong. The parrot falls within a rare tribe of Clearthinking Creedence, which means that the parrot – or as the parrot prefers, 'Peter' – is as intelligent as you. With using his own code of a parrot alphabet, he told us that he had been brutally attacked by his former owner (37) when communicating with his girlfriend (17) about former owners' sexual abilities. When was Peter found, he looked really shocked and threatened; maybe because of human bite which was noticeable on his right wing just at the first sight.

'I should NOT have done anything.' said he in isotypes he uses. 'He was absolutely furious! I was trying to ask him if he does not want to talk about the situation right as man to parrot. I was trying to cover what me and Shirley (the girlfriend – ed.) had been talking about, but he must have been listening to us for a long time before. But I am not still sure why he was so angry; I was talking to Shirley just as her friend, what he should have been himself.'

The tragic story has a luckier ending. Peter was urgently nursed by the most prominent veterinary surgeon of the United Kingdom, Lawrence Prince, D.V. M. Thanks to him Peter was cured soon; these days he will be installed with a ceremony in the director's office of the Institute For Communicate Between Parrots And People (IFCBPAP).
